FrameSaver Introduces Rot-Resistant “Fat Boy” T-Mull

Product Line Extension Features the Patented FrameSaver® Technology

NACOGDOCHES, Texas – FrameSaver, an industry innovator in wood door frame technology, today announced the expansion of their FrameSaver product line with the introduction of their “Fat Boy” T-Mull. Known for their rot-resistant, moisture proof, wood door frames, the company now offers the same FrameSaver® technology and money-back guarantee for these patio T-mulls.

Featured in primer colors of white, gray or tan, the new FrameSaver Fat Boy T-Mulls are available in dimensions of 2 1/2 inches by 3 9/16 inches and 2 1/2 inches by 4 3/8 inches and will accommodate 6-8 and 8-0 doors.

FrameSaver’s Fat Boy T-Mull eliminates the labor of joining frames back to back for patio door units and comes with pre-cut end-work for ease of installation.

"In January of this year, FrameSaver announced an aggressive new growth plan and the extension of its product line," said Rick Hagel, CEO of FrameSaver. "Following the announcement, we successfully launched the FrameSaver® garage door frames. Adding the Fat Boy T-Mull to our line of products gives builders and construction professionals the ability to provide their customers with a rot-resistant solution for all of their exterior doors."

The new “green friendly” Fat Boy T-Mulls will be available for full-scale production starting May 1, 2005 and include FrameSaver’s lifetime rot-resistant guarantee and transferable warranty.

“Offering a wood door frame with a lifetime guarantee is a point of pride for our company. Our near-term goal is to offer the homebuilders and homebuyers of America the chance to eliminate the rotting of their home’s wood door frames as a result of wicking and moisture absorption. The Fat Boy T-Mull brings us one step closer to achieving our goal.”
